Ranked by Chambers USA, named to Forbes's inaugural "America's Top Women Lawyers" list, and recognized by Lawdragon as one of "500 Leading Lawyers in the USA," Megan O'Neill co-founded DTO and leads the firm's Litigation practice.

Megan is a fierce litigator and master strategist. Despite her love of winning, Megan never loses sight of the practical reality a company faces in litigation: what is best for our business? She pairs her decades of experience litigating high-stakes cases with her ability to "cut to the chase," gaining clients' trust by speaking candidly about what they are facing and how to accomplish their goals.

While Megan's generalist background enables her to tackle everything from thorny breach of contract and fraud claims to trademark infringement cases, she is most recognized for her work in the class action space. In the past few years, she has litigated class actions as lead counsel on behalf of clients such as HP, Unilever, Honda, Target, and Walgreens and is often invited to speak and chair conferences focused on the defense of class actions. Megan is equally comfortable at an appellate podium and in a trial court, having handled appeals to the Second, Third, and Ninth Circuits and tried several cases to verdict.

Megan's teams often secure victories at the very outset of the case on a motion to dismiss, either ending the case altogether or greatly reducing the potential liability (and cost of defense) for her clients. By way of example, Megan led the team that defended a major retailer in a class action alleging that consumers had paid a "pink tax" on a women's hair-loss treatment priced higher than the similar men's treatment. The court adopted DTO's arguments that some claims were preempted, while others failed as a matter of law based on the statutory language, an argument Megan's team buttressed with legislative history. In another class action in which she represented several defendants, Megan obtained key admissions in the plaintiff's deposition and leveraged those in opposing class certification. The plaintiff capitulated and dismissed the entire case.

Megan's time outside of work is usually focused on one of three things: her two boys, her hometown sports teams (Go Birds!), and her side hustle as a hip-hop dance teacher and choreographer.

Experience

- Obtained dismissal of a putative class action in the Central District of California in which the plaintiff claimed the company falsely advertised its brain supplement as providing benefits for which it lacked scientific support. Megan's team filed a motion to dismiss, arguing lack of substantiation and lack of plausibility. The court granted the motion, dismissing the case.
 - Secured a victory for a major tech company in a putative class action when a court ruled that the plaintiff could not represent a nationwide class. The court adopted DTO's argument, dismissing the plaintiff's breach of contract and consumer protection claims for all states other than New York, which led to a quick dismissal of the case.
 - Successfully defeated wiretapping claims at the pleading stage in a case alleging violation of the California Invasion of Privacy Act (CIPA) in LA Superior. One of a flood of similar cases across the country, Plaintiff alleged that DTO's client's use of a third-party online chat feature constituted wiretapping under California law. Megan's team filed a demurrer, which the court sustained, agreeing with DTO's arguments that the allegations showed nothing more than the chat feature was acting as a tool in furtherance of the company's own operations.
 - Obtained reversal by the U.S. Supreme Court of the Ninth Circuit's grant of summary judgment in a trademark infringement lawsuit involving First Amendment issues.
 - Representing early-stage tech company in Lanham Act class action in Eastern District of New York brought on behalf of a putative class of businesses alleging false advertising and trademark infringement.
